Gold Service Extras provides customers with:

- a 30 day price guarantee protection for pricing changes at The Good Guys and nominated competitors;
- $20 in 90 Day StoreCash sent to them (via a digital wallet activated online or downloaded to their mobile phone) three times each year of their Gold Service Extras membership to spend on eligible products at The Good Guys;

Target market

The target market for Gold Service Extras comprises:

- customers who can afford to pay upfront the purchase price of Gold Service Extras and regularly shop with The Good Guys - and are therefore likely to benefit from Gold Service

Extras Rewards and having $20 in 90 Day StoreCash sent to them (via digital wallet activated online or downloaded to their mobile phone) three times each year under their Gold Service Extras Membership to spend on eligible products at The Good Guys; and

- customers who:
 - purchase goods from The Good Guys for personal or domestic use (or an office product for use in an office of up to 5 people) which may suffer mechanical or electrical failure;
 - want certainty (beyond what is provided by the Australian Consumer Law) about their rights to have those goods replaced or repaired in the event those goods suffer a mechanical or electrical failure after expiry of the equivalent replacement/repair rights under The Good Guys' minimum voluntary warranty; and
 - who can afford to pay upfront the purchase price of Gold Service Extras.

Gold Service Extras is not suitable for customers who:

- purchase goods from The Good Guys for commercial use (other than office products used in an office of up to 5 people), for example a domestic use washing machine installed at a laundromat;
- do not intend retaining the goods they purchase from The Good Guys in Australia;
- expect to mitigate the financial consequences of the goods they purchase from The Good Guys suffering accidental damage, loss or theft; or
- who cannot afford to pay upfront the purchase price of Gold Service Extras.

Distribution of Gold Service Extras

Gold Service Extras should only be made available for purchase by customers in respect of goods purchased from Gold Service Extras which may suffer mechanical or electrical failure.

Prior to purchasing Gold Service Extras, the purchase price of Gold Service Extras must be disclosed to customers. Customers must also be:

- informed of at least 3 benefits of Gold Service Extras other than product care; and
- if they are told of the product care benefits of Gold Service Extras:
 - provided with a copy of (or provided with access to) The Good Guys' "Understanding Your Rights" brochure which contains information about The Good Guys' Minimum Voluntary Warranty period and the Australian Consumer Law; and
 - informed that even if they do not purchase Gold Service Extras, if their product is faulty:
 - they may be entitled to have the product repaired or replaced for free under the manufacturer's warranty, depending upon the length and terms of the manufacturer's warranty;
 - they are also already covered for a free replacement or repair during the relevant periods indicated in the Understanding Your Rights brochure under The Good Guys' Minimum Voluntary Warranty; and
 - they may also have rights under the Australian Consumer Law to a free remedy even after expiry of the manufacturer's warranty and The Good Guys' Minimum Voluntary Warranty periods, but the exact duration and nature of Australian Consumer Law rights is uncertain; and
 - informed that the main benefit of the product care features of Gold Service Extras is that it provides them with certainty that they will be entitled to have their product repaired or replaced in the event it becomes faulty after expiry of their replacement and repair rights under The Good Guys' Minimum Voluntary Warranty, until the end of their Gold Service Extras membership.

These disclosures make it likely that customers who purchase Gold Service Extras will be within the target market because such customers, when they are making a decision about whether to purchase Gold Service Extras, will be informed about:

- the purchase price of Gold Service Extras;
- the non-product care benefits of Gold Service Extras, so that they can make an informed assessment as to whether they see sufficient value in such benefits to purchase Gold Service Extras; and
- if they are told about the product care benefits of Gold Service Extras:
 - the rights they have (even if they do not purchase Gold Service Extras) under the Australian Consumer Law, The Good Guys minimum voluntary warranty and the manufacturer's warranty to have their product repaired if it is faulty; and
 - the key attributes of Gold Service Extras which may benefit them.

Sales staff should not make Gold Service Extras available to a customer if they become aware that the customer:

- is intending to use a product they are purchasing from The Good Guys for commercial purposes (other than an office product being used in an office of up to 5 people); or
- not intending to retain a product they are purchasing from The Good Guys in Australia.
